THE APOSTLE PAUL ON MARS HILL. But we cannot stop longer here, for there is a hill near by of more interest, though it has not one chip of marble to suggest a statue or a temple. We hasten down the Aeropolis to ascend the Areopagus, or Mars Hill, as it is called. It took only about three minutes to walk the distance, and the two hill tope are so pear that what I said in religious discourse on Mars Hill was heard distinctly by some English gentlemen on the Acropolis. This Mars Hill is a rough pile of rock fifty feet high. It was famous long before New Testamont times.

The Persians easily and terribly assaulted the Acropolis from this hilltop. Here assembled the court to try crimipals. It was held in the nighttime, so that the faces of the judges could not be seen, nor the faces of the lawyers who made the plea, and so, instead of a trial being one of emotion, it must have been one of cool justice; but there was one occasion on this hill memorable above all others.

A little man, physically weak, and his rhetoric described by himself as contemptible, had by his sermons rocked Athens with commotion, and he was summoned either by writ of law or hearty invitation to come upon that pulpit of rock and give a specimen of his theology. All the wiseacres of Athens turned out and turned up to hear him. The more venerable of them sat in an amphitheater, the granite seats of which are still visible, but the other people swarmed on all sides of the hill and at the base of it to hear this man, whom some called a fanatic and others his hearers in emotion too great called a madcap and others a blasto bear; had in the theater of phemer and others styled contemptuously, "This fellow."

Paul arrived in answer to the writ or invitation, and confronted them and still there), seen enacted the tragedies gave them the biggest dose that mortals ever took. He was so built that had the ancestors of these Grecians on nothing could scare him, and as for Jupiter and Athenia, the god and the goddess whose images were in full sight on the adjoining hill, he had not so much regard for them as he had for the thoughts of Resurrection and Judgant that was crawling in the sand under his feet. In that audience were the Some moved they adjourn to some first orators of the world, and they had other day to hear more on the same voices like flutes when they were pass- theme, but others would have torn the two and like trumpets when they were aroused, and I think they laughed in the sleeves of their gowns as this insigaitleant looking man rose to speak
